When you speak to important people ("Top Dogs"), how you feel inside impacts how impressive you are on your outside. For example, if you think they're more important than you, you'll be too deferential. You'll say things like "Thanks for sparing the time to see me. I won't take much of your time."

Andy Bounds - Top Dog: impress and influence everyone you meet

The basic premise (beyond the dogs) is that to impress and influence people you have to demonstrate you are their equal. So there's a degree of basic assertiveness in here too. Some of the ideas don't sit well with me - I believe thanking someone for their time is basic good manners. The authors think it's a sign of subservience.
