Prodigals Do Come Home By

When our prodigals come home, we need to be patient with them. Don't let the first thing we say be, "I hope you've left that life behind forever." Many of the prodigals I have met over the years have been people who have been Christians for years but have been bruised or broken in some way—perhaps by other Christians.

Prodigals Do Come Home by Robert Steinkamp

The biblical parable of the prodigal son, as told by the Lord Jesus, provides the pattern for prodigal spouses to return home. Bob Steinkamp, the author of this book, was the prodigal in his marriage. But his wife, Charlyne trusted God to restore their marriage, though at the time it seemed so hopeless and looked impossible.

22. Prodigals do come home. We come home, not to people who are dabbling in standing, but we come home to spouses who are serious about their relationship with Jesus Christ, and serious about praying their spouse away from Hell. We come home to standers who are not blown away by the unexpected. We come home to praying spouses who have not set deadlines for God, nor for us.

Prodigals Do Come Home By Bob Steinkamp

We all know prodigals. David Delk, president of Man in the Mirror Ministries, quotes statistics that 85 percent of children in America drop out of church before graduation; of those, only 40 percent return. Said another way, currently only 60 percent of children raised in church follow Jesus as adults. That means 40 percent of the children in our churches this past Sunday will grow up to become spiritual prodigals. We all have prodigals in our lives and in our families.
