Slave narratives by African slaves from North America were first published in England in the 18th century. They soon became the main form of African-American literature in the 19th century. Slave narratives were publicized by abolitionists, who sometimes participated as editors, or writers if slaves were not literate. During the first half of the 19th century, the controversy over slavery in the United States led to impassioned literature on both sides of the issue.

Slave narrative - Wikipedia

Furthermore, as fictionalized narratives of slavery, many texts borrow and replicate to varying degrees the formal conventions, such as style or plot, of the classic autobiographical slave narrative of the 18th and 19th centuries while others depart dramatically from this form, challenging and reimagining the “official” historical record to assert the voice and agency of the texts’ narrator-protagonists.
