Novara | REI Co-op

Novara, was the private label brand of bicycles, apparel and bicycle accessories, that was exclusively available through the consumer cooperative REI. The brand was introduced in 1983 and was headquartered in Kent, Washington. Novara bikes are designed in house; outsourced for manufacturing, then finished by REI.

This bike was purchased for annual summer touring. It performed exceptionally well on the Erie Canal tour of 2008. I own a bike for commuting and a road bike that I also use for the daily commute. Touring season is approaching and I took the Novara for today's commute. The bike immediately got my attention because of how smooth it road.

Glad to hear they are still in production even if with a new name. I bought my first Novara bike at the Anchorage REI over 25 years ago and it is still going strong. Novara Randonee - Touring Bicycle Review Novara should be more of a recognizable name in the bicycle touring realm. Although Novara isn't really a go-to touring brand like Surly, Cannondale, and Trek, the Novara Randonee is just as well-made and durable as a touring bicycle manufactured by any of those brands.

In my experience, REI's Novara bikes are good middle of the road choices. They are worlds better than buying a bike from a big box store (WalMart, KMart, MartMart), but not as good as high end bikes from your local bike shop. And Novara has the added benefit of REI's extraordinary customer support.

As far as Novara goes, you will get better components on a Novara bike than any other brand of the same price point. REI doesn't need to build the cost of advertising into the price of the bike, so they're able to put the next level components on to a similarly priced bike. But if you don't mind spending a little extra scratch, go for the Ghost!
