Stone Marten Martes Foina Habitat

The beech marten, also known as the stone marten, house marten or white breasted marten, is a species of marten native to much of Europe and Central Asia, though it has established a feral population in North America. It is listed as Least Concern by the IUCN on account of its wide distribution, its large population, and its presence in a number of protected areas. It is superficially similar to the pine marten, but differs from it by its smaller size and habitat preferences. While the pine mart

Beech marten - Wikipedia

When in sympatry with the pine marten (Martes martes), the stone marten is a habitat generalist with synantropic behavior (use of human structures; Delibes 1983; Herrman 1994; Reig 1992). In areas of the Iberian Peninsula without pine martens (Matos and Santos-Reis 2006), stone martens are known to occupy the higher quality forest habitat (Virgós and Garcia 2002 ; Virgós et al. 2000).

The stone marten (Martes foina) is often found in urban habitats across continental Europe, due to its flexible foraging behaviour. We compare the utilisation of food types for martens living in villages in a more populated region with that of martens living in a less populated mountainous forest region, over the summer fruiting season (May-July) of 2013, inferred from the analysis of 310 faecal samples.

Comparing the summer diet of stone martens (Martes foina ...

Stone marten (Martes foina) and pine marten (Martes martes) occur sympatrically over a large area in Central Europe and utilize similar habitats and food, therefore it is expected that their coexistence requires differentiation in at least one of their niche dimensions or the mechanisms through which these dimensions are used. To test this hypothesis, we used differences in the species activity patterns and habitat selection, estimated with a resource selection function (RSF), to predict the ...
