"In Down to the Crossroads, Aram Goudsouzian re-creates the last great march of the civil rights movement in vibrant and intimate detail. Through compelling prose and exciting storytelling, Goudsouzian introduces contemporary readers to the central characters of a great American drama: a historic political movement in transition, precisely at the end of the era of nonviolent civil disobedience and the beginning of the revolutionary politics of Black Power, militancy, and armed resistance.

Down to the Crossroads chronicles the 1966 Meredith March, the last big national march of the civil rights era, where Stokely Carmichael popularized the term "Black Power" as he led chants for the crowd crossing Mississippi. Goudsouzian captures the march in all its complex drama, and explains its importance.
