I’m Joe Firestone and this is my blog on all things knowledge, knowledge processing, and knowledge management. I named it “All Life Is Problem Solving” after the title of a book by Karl Popper because I think Popper had it right when he viewed the essential characteristic of life as problem solving, otherwise known as the process of making new knowledge when old knowledge won’t work in changed circumstances.

About - KMCI

Perhaps a good place to start in this review of "All Life Is Problem Solving" is to focus on one essay, "Towards an Evolutionary Theory of Knowledge" written in 1989. Karl Popper (b.1902, d.1994) elegantly proposes that knowledge is linked to expectations. These expectations express theories of reality.
