Assessment of the Elderly Patient | The Preoperative ...

Organ system-based vertical approach to preoperative assessment of the elderly patient by an anesthesiologist differs from the traditional diagnostic approach because it applies the various techniques of inquiry (shaded bars) sequentially to each major organ system (open bars) in order to assess organ function and functional reserve. The primary objective of preoperative assessment should be evaluation of physical status, rather than the identification of specific underlying disorders.

PREOPERATIVE ASSESSMENT OF THE ELDERLY PATIENT - ScienceDirect

In any patient, and especially in the elderly patient undergoing surgery, a thorough preoperative assessment that includes a complete review of the patient and the problem, adequate preparation of the patient and caregivers for the surgery and its expected outcomes, and a highlighted list of issues to be dealt with prior to surgery is imperative to ensure that the surgery will be successful for both the patient and the surgeon.

Preoperative Assessment of the Elderly Cancer patients ...

An understanding of the limitations of physiological function in the elderly and rheumatic patient enables an accurate assessment of the likely response to the stress of surgery and therefore the final outcome to be made. The anaesthetic technique used and the choice of perioperative monitoring often makes the difference between success and failure.

Anaesthesia UK : Preoperative assessment in the elderly

Preoperative laboratory assessment should consist of hemoglobin and creatinine measurements and include a urinalysis and electrocardiogram. The need for additional tests is indicated by the history and physical examination. Following this assessment, therapeutic and prophylactic measures to reduce surgical morbidity and mortality can be implemented.

Preoperative evaluation of the elderly

One of the major goals of the preoperative assessment is to estimate the risk of poor surgical outcomes, including cardiovascular complications, stroke and death. Patient specific risks can be roughly estimated with the careful and limited use of preoperative risk calculators.

Preoperative assessment and care of the elderly ...

RESULTS: This review identified 54 studies of older patients; 28 that examined preoperative clinical features associated with mortality (n = 1,422,433 patients) and 26 that examined factors associated with surgical complications (n = 136,083 patients). There was substantial heterogeneity in study methods, measures, and outcomes.

Abstract. Background: Cancer is a disease that particularly affects the elderly and, although surgery is the first treatment choice, many elderly cancer patients do not receive standard surgery because they are considered unfit for treatment due to an inaccurate estimation of operative risk. Careful preoperative assessment is essential in the elderly and this has been described in a previous article published in this journal (see key references).

Perioperative care of the elderly | BJA Education | Oxford ...

This guideline covers routine preoperative tests for people aged over 16 who are having elective surgery. It aims to reduce unnecessary testing by advising which tests to offer people before minor, intermediate and major or complex surgery, taking into account specific comorbidities (cardiovascular, renal and respiratory conditions and diabetes and obesity).

Overview | Routine preoperative tests for elective surgery ...

Preoperative of elderly patients should identify patients who are at high risk for adverse outcomes, balanced between function and futility. This type of assessment enables patients and their families to have informed discussions about the risks and develop treatment plans that meet their goals.
