Triple Witching Definition

Triple Witching Friday happens on the third Friday of March, June, September, and December, and is the simultaneous expiration (or rollover) of various futures and options contracts. Many U.S. stock index futures, stock index options, and stock options expire on these days. With the addition of single stock futures contracts in 2002, which also expire on these days, triple witching is sometimes referred to as quadruple witching—which is more accurate, but the term never caught on.
