An electromagnetic field (also EM field) is a classical (i.e. non-quantum) field produced by moving electric charges. It is the field described by classical electrodynamics and is the classical counterpart to the quantized electromagnetic field tensor in quantum electrodynamics. The electromagnetic field propagates at the speed of light (in fact, this field can be identified as light) and ...

Electromagnetic field - Wikipedia

In accordance with this theory, electromagnetic energy is transported according to the classical theory of wave propagation, and the field energy is quantized only during the detection process [8]. When an optical field interacts with a photo-detector, a quantum of energy is absorbed in the form of a photon and the absorption of this photon gives rise to the release of an excited electron.

As an example, quantum electrodynamics contains a Dirac field ψ representing the electron field and a vector field A_μ representing the electromagnetic field (photon field). (Despite its name, the quantum electromagnetic "field" actually corresponds to the classical electromagnetic four-potential, rather than the classical electric and magnetic fields.)

Quantum field theory - Wikipedia

Field theory had its origins in the 18th century in a mathematical formulation of Newtonian mechanics, but it was seen as deficient as it implied action at a distance. In 1852, Michael Faraday treated the magnetic field as a physical object, reasoning about lines of force. James Clerk Maxwell used Faraday's conceptualisation to help formulate his unification of electricity and magnetism in his electromagnetic theory. With Albert Einstein's special relativity and the Michelson-Morley ...
