Discover Meteor Building Real Time

Meteor is at the forefront of a new wave of frameworks that make building web apps easier, simpler, and faster. Not only is Meteor entirely real-time (meaning any change to your database is automatically reflected live in the browser), but the fact that it uses JavaScript on both the client and server means that you won't have to juggle with multiple languages and environments anymore.

It has been almost two weeks since my last blog post. During this time, I've been working hands-on with Meteor, Node.js, MongoDB and Twitter's Bootstrap framework. One of my main objectives was to find gotchas that might disqualify Meteor as a viable solution for upcoming projects. During this time, I spent quite a bit of time working with HTML5 and CSS3 in the context of Bootstrap.
