Data Interpretation or DI refers to the implementation of procedures through which data is reviewed for the purpose of arriving at an inference. Data can be obtained from multiple sources e.g. data from running of industries, census population data etc. Interpreting data requires analyzing data to infer information from it in order to answer questions.

Tips to Solve Questions in Data Interpretation - Hitbullseye

Using Statsbomb data on La Liga matches, we filtered each possession starting in the opposing team's own third into three categories: passing out the back (three successive passes in their own third), hoofing it up (a long aerial pass), and the remainder (typically flat transition passes to advancing fullbacks or midfielders).
