Design Of Waffle Slab

The design of waffle slabs is the same as that of ribbed slabs, with the difference being that waffle slabs have ribs spanning in both directions, and the coefficients used for analysing the slab is similar to those used for two-way restrained slab. Waffle slabs are supported on beams or columns, where the support zones are made to be uniformly thick.

The main objective of this project work is to come up with a design of waffle slab To come up with a relatively high compressive strength of concrete design. To implement a better resistance to fire than steel of concrete design. To come up with a cast to take the shape required so as to make it widely used in precast structural components.

1. Two-Way Joist (Waffle) Slab Design Approach and Methodology. Two-way joist slab often called two-way ribbed slab or waffle slab is an economical floor system when the spans are long and/or loads are high. Waffle slab analysis and design is similar to the procedure used with flat plates except that special considerations need to be taken into account to reduce the complexity of calculations needed when using exact geometry of the two-way joists.

(PDF) Optimum design of reinforced concrete waffle slabs

Waffle slab or ribbed slab is a structural component which is plain on its top and contains grid like system on its bottom surface. The top of ribbed slab is normally thin and the bottom grid lines are generally ribs which are laid perpendicular to each other with equal depth. Waffle slab has two directional reinforcement.

Waffle Slab or Ribbed Slab Construction Procedure and ...

Waffle slabs are a reinforced concrete footing and slab system constructed on the ground. They consist of a perimeter footing (edge beam) and a series of narrow internal beams (strip footings) at one metre nominal centres running each way. The whole footing and slab system is constructed on top of the ground.
