This paper deals with the study of weak sharp solutions for nonsmooth variational inequalities and finite convergence property of the proximal point method. We present several characterizations for weak sharpness of the solutions set of nonsmooth variational inequalities without using the gap functions. We show that under weak sharpness of the solutions set, the sequence generated by proximal point methods terminates after a finite number of iterations.

On optimality conditions for vector variational inequalities

Generalized Minty and Stampacchia vector variational inequalities are introduced involving generalized subdifferential. Under strongly geodesic convexity, relations between solutions of these inequalities and a nonsmooth vector optimization problem are established.
