Begg Cousland can design and supply all types of gas scrubber, either as 'end-of-pipe' pollution control or as a gas cleaning stage within a process. Gas scrubbers are all designed to ensure a good contact and mixing between gas and liquid, usually for Absorption, Odour Control or Particulate removal. Desorption and Distillation are also mass transfers done in columns.

In a complete plant, gas absorption is followed by a stripping operation for regeneration and recycle of the absorbent and for recovering the preferentially absorbed substances. In reboiled absorbers, partial stripping of the lighter components is performed in the lower part of the equipment.

Chapter 13: Distillation and Gas Absorption | Engineering360

In reboiled absorbers, partial stripping of the lighter components is performed in the lower part of the equipment. In distillation or absorption, rectification and stripping are performed in the same equipment. These equipment types are of two kinds, tray-type or packed and stagewise or continuous. The trays function as individual stages and produce stepwise changes in concentration.

Gas Absorption Process. Gas Absorption Process:- In the Absorption process, we have a feed which is a mixture of various gases. This Gas mixture is contacted with a liquid which is called a solvent. When the contact takes place, mass transport of the component or components of interest takes place from the Gas phase to the Liquid phase.

Gas Absorption Process - Chemical Engineering World

Absorption Equipment Absorption and stripping are conducted in tray (or plate or stage) columns, packed columns, spray towers, bubble columns, and centrifugal contactors. In general, operating pressure should be high and temperature low for an absorber, to minimize stage requirements and/or absorbent flow rate to lower the equipment volume required to accommodate the gas flow.

General Information/Equipment Design Stirred tanks, also called agitated tanks or CSTRs, are used when the absorption process includes a slow liquid-phase chemical reaction, or when close control of the process is needed. In a stirred tank, the gas is introduced directly into the liquid and mixed by the stirrer. The solids are suspended.
