5V Light Detector analog / digital ‘Flying Fish – MH Sensor Series”. Took me a while to find the purpose of this little device I had in the mail recently. it’s a light detection sensor, which I connected to the arduino nano to test its functionality. it serves the amount of light from 0 (very bright) to 1024 (very dark) using the analog pin. To use this device with the ESP8266 you’ll probably need to adapt the voltage and transform it between 0-1V.

This is an academic research project to create a response mechanism that can fit into a small aquarium tank and a fish can learn to operate. I have worked out a beam-break sensor solution to this problem, but I'd like to expand it into a more general solution, especially a touch-screen for simultaneous display of multiple "targets" and sensing the fish's physical contact with each target.
