Further, we have gone through the various techniques which can be used in the future for optimizing the power of the network and the presented a summary of the work that has already been done to improve energy efficiency of network using these techniques. In CE MIMO-OFDM the transmitted signals for each antenna are designed to have constant amplitude regardless of the channel realization and the information symbols that must be conveyed to the users. This facilitates the use of power-efficient components, such as phase shifters and non-linear power amplifiers.
