In a building whose heat is delivered by hot water radiators or by hot water convector units every one of these may have its own individual manually-operated air bleeder valves installed. If one radiator or convector is not heating up, find and open the air bleeder valve to let out air. Close the valve immediately when water begins to come out.

Guide to Air Bleeder Valves on Heating Systems: Heating ...

To locate the valve, check the top edge of the radiator – the release valve looks like a small, square pin. A double radiator will have a valve on each panel and you will need to bleed both. Universal radiators can also have a valve on the back panel, so be sure to check for this. Step 7

How to Bleed a Radiator | Wickes.co.uk

An automatic bleeding valve or air release valve is a plumbing valve used to automatically release trapped air from a heating system. Air, or other gas, may collect within plumbing. For water delivery systems to taps and basins, particularly with good main supply pressure, this air is usually flushed through with the water flow and does not cause a problem, although in some hot-water systems air locks can be problematic. In a closed heating system though, it has no other means of escape and buil
