Production management often requires its own set of tools, integrated with, but distinct from, scheduling tools. As with any feedback and control system care in selection and discipline in execution are necessary.

Integrating production control into schedule systems

Similarly, the capacity of the information-handling channel of the production system may also be an important measure of a system's output. The management of information flows, or the planning and control of the system to achieve acceptable outputs, is an important task of the production manager. While the capacity of the system is the major factor in determining whether output expectations can be met, the additional consideration of quality must also be seen as a limiting factor. The ...
