Institution And Passivity Course Notes

The second half of Institution and Passivity consists of Merleau-Ponty's lecture notes for the course entitled "The Problem of Passivity: Sleep, the Unconscious, Memory" and its "Summary". The "problem" Merleau-Ponty addresses in this course, as he sets it up in the "Summary," is similar to that of the first course: how to explain those aspects of experience that cannot be accounted for by usual conceptions of the "subject" as either exclusively constituting or constituted.

Institutions are the result of the dynamics of the "interworld" (an extremely important concept for grasping the point of institutions and which is first developed in the "phenomenology of perception") - and it is here in Institutions that dialectics (as interpreted in the "adventures of dialectics") and perception, both exist, where the point is that subjective experience ONLY exists within the fields first opened-up and unfurled by the above mentioned institutional examples.
