Noel Coward's song, 'Mad Dogs and Englishmen' was first performed in 1932, when the disease had come to be viewed as exotic and tropical. Britain experienced two rabies outbreaks in the twentieth century, the first between 1918 and 1922, probably owing to dog-smuggling from the Continent, and then in 1969-70, when the disease was associated less with dogs and more with the wild fox population.
