A few of these degrees, for example engineering and medical physics, have a heavier focus on the practical applications of physics than a straight physics degree. You could consider these degrees if you wanted to study for a specific career path, but because physics is a good choice anyway in terms of employability it is not necessary to choose a more vocational degree for the sake of a career.

You need to know a few things about Physics, but it is all very simple. When the bullet is fired the only force acting on the bullet is gravity. Acceleration on the x-axis will be 0. Acceleration on the y-axis will be gravity. Let us examine what we know: time; gravity; distance_to_target; To calculate you will need these equations:
