When a person first enters into addiction therapy, the first session will likely be a “get to know you” kind of format. Therapists will work to determine what kinds of things the person may need or want to talk about most, and what method of treatment or course of therapy may be the most beneficial.

How Is an Addiction Therapy Session Conducted?

The First Session with Substance Abusers offers clinicians an innovative plan for conducting an initial session that has proven successful in unearthing substance abuse problems with even the most resistant and manipulative clients.

The First Session with Substance Abusers: Nicholas A ...

There are two main goals for the first session-to establish a therapeutic relationship and to gather information. The most important thing to remember during the first session is, simply put, to be with the client. What I mean by this is that you must focus on what the client is saying at all times. Do not try to think of what to say next.
