Intent To Treat Analysis Of

In medicine an intention-to-treat analysis of the results of an experiment is based on the initial treatment assignment and not on the treatment eventually received. ITT analysis is intended to avoid various misleading artifacts that can arise in intervention research such as non-random attrition of participants from the study or crossover. ITT is also simpler than other forms of study design and analysis, because it does not require observation of compliance status for units assigned to differe

Intention-to-treat analysis - Wikipedia

In an analysis by treatment received (as-treated analysis), the effect of a therapy is judged only in patients who actually receive the therapy; in an intention-to-treat analysis, patients are evaluated on the basis of the group to which they were randomly assigned, regardless of whether they actually received the therapy. Although as-treated analyses may seem more intuitive, they have the potential to introduce significant biases.
