Hubert Parry began to conceive his six motets, now known as the Songs of farewell, in 1913, but much of their composition took place in 1914 and 1915. As an agnostic, and an individual who intensely disliked church ritual and doctrine, Parry did not initially consider the motets to be liturgical in character or function (though later he did concede that their most suitable environment was a cathedral or large sacred space), nor did he intend them to be considered as some form of Christian ...

Songs of farewell - Hyperion Records - CDs, MP3 and ...

Composed towards the end of Parry’s life, the Songs of Farewell have taken on something of an epithetical interpretation; they are almost a musical summation of his compositional life, reflecting Parry’s love of English renaissance madrigals and partsongs as much as the influence on his work from German composers like Brahms—made more complicated as these works were composed as the country (and its music) fell out of favour at the start of the Great War. This album also includes works ...

This disc contains some of the finest British choral works of their time by composers whose work is rarely programmed together. Sir Hubert Parry's Songs of Farewell were composed around 1915-16 near the end of his life (he died in 1918 at the age of 70). Frank Bridge's Prayer, also from 1916, remains his only major choral work.
