Kevin Shillington The study of African history came of age in the 1960s, coinciding with the emergence of many newly-independent modern African states. Professional historians working in the universities and archives of Africa, Europe and north America have over the past thirty years, produced millions of words and hundreds of volumes on various aspects of the history of Africa.

Shillington's "History of Africa" serves its purpose; namely, an introduction and historical survey of the history of Africa from ancient to modern time. The historical accuracy of the text - especially concerning the time before the bronze age - is seriously dubious, and moot at best.

Shillington acknowledges humanity's African origins, but considers the early folks were probably brown (not the de rigueur black); that ironworking was probably introduced via the Maghrib (rather than diffusing from black Meroe); considers Napata and Meroe to have been civilized from Egypt (rather than the other way around); and does not insist that the ancient Egyptians were all dark Africoids.
