Utilization Of Resources. How humans utilize renewable or non-renewable sources is another factor that relates to human-environmental interaction. In most cases, humans use these resources to generate energy. For instance, we use energy for our homes, industries, transportation system, and to extract more resources.

How Human-Environmental Interaction Works

Though the relationship between human activities and the environment are multifaceted they can be grouped in major two types of activities. They are: Use of natural resources like land, water, soils, food, minerals, animals and plants. Production of waste like agriculture, industry and mining and from our own bodies.

Human Environmental Interactions can be defined as interactions between the human social system and (the "rest" of) the ecosystem. Human social systems and ecosystems are complex adaptive systems (Marten, 2001). Complex because ecosystems and human social systems have many parts and many connections between these parts.
