All brains are different. One teaching style, one approach, one design will not succeed with all learners. What a teacher imagines will be easy can be very difficult. A child's brain is remarkably plastic (malleable) but inefficient; an adult's is less plastic and more efficient. All brains are different.

Different Learners How To Reach The Hard ...

Figuring out how to pedal a bike and memorizing the rules of chess require two different types of learning, and now for the first time, researchers have been able to distinguish each type of learning by the brain-wave patterns it produces. These distinct neural signatures could guide scientists as they study the underlying neurobiology of how we both learn motor skills and work through complex cognitive tasks, says Earl K. Miller, the Picower Professor of Neuroscience at the Picower ...

Slow and steady. These changes in the brain allow for faster, stronger signaling between neurons as the brain gains new skills. But the best way to speed up those signals is to introduce new information to our noggins — slowly. Many students instead try to memorize lots of information the night before a test.
