The Handbook of Discourse Analysis

At that time the Buddha called the monks to him and said: “Monks I shall teach you the Dharma that is beautiful in the beginning, the middle and the end; the Dharma whose meaning and taste are good, pure and peaceful (greatly beneficial for the world), sublime and undefiled. That is the teaching on the Great Emptiness.

Sutra / Discourse on the Great Emptiness | Plum Village

The discourse explains that consciousness will be established when there is lust for any of the four nutriments (which are edible food, contact, volition, and consciousness itself). Such a situation compares to a painter who draws the image of a woman or a man. However, when there is no longer such lust, the following happens:
