"It was natural for scientists to assume that bird vision is like human vision," says Geoffrey Hill, an Auburn University ornithologist and the author of Bird Coloration. "After all, birds and humans are both active by day, we use bright colors as cues.... No one really imagined birds might see the world differently."

True Colors: How Birds See the World

Vision is the most important sense for birds, since good eyesight is essential for safe flight. Birds have a number of adaptations which give visual acuity superior to that of other vertebrate groups; a pigeon has been described as "two eyes with wings". The avian eye resembles that of a reptile, with ciliary muscles that can change the shape of the lens rapidly and to a greater extent than in ...
