An African In Greenland Tete

Many obvious ironies occur as Tete-Michel Kpomassie, a young man from Togo in West Africa, makes a journey of discovery to Greenland. For the first sixty pages, the author describes life in Togo in lively detail and his decision to go to Greenland, a country as far, culturally, from Togo as it is possible to get.

An African in Greenland (New York Review Books Classics ...

An African in Greenland is an autobiographical book; as a teenager in Togo, Tété-Michel Kpomassie read a book about Greenland and decided to go there. It took him eight years, working a variety of jobs, to make his way up through West Africa and Europe before eventually arranging a trip to Greenland, where he stayed for about two years (in, if I've got my sums right, 1965).

An African in Greenland by Tété-Michel Kpomassie

About An African in Greenland. Tété-Michel Kpomassie was a teenager in Togo when he discovered a book about Greenland—and knew that he must go there. Working his way north over nearly a decade, Kpomassie finally arrived in the country of his dreams.

An African in Greenland by Tété-Michel Kpomassie ...

An African in Greenland is a 1981 book by the Togolese author Tété-Michel Kpomassie. Overview. The book details Kpomassie's upbringing in Togo, his encounter as a teen with a book about Greenland and his determination to move there and become a hunter.

An African in Greenland - Wikipedia

In his brilliant book ‘An African in Greenland’ Kpomassie entertainingly records his adventures among the Inuit. The book is the ultimate exotic mix—an adventure story that begins in Togo, a narrow strip of a country, formerly a French colony, sandwiched between Benin and Ghana, and ends in Upernavik, way north of the Arctic Circle, on the west coast of Greenland.

Tété-Michel Kpomassie: the First African in Greenland!

Tété-Michel Kpomassie’s An African in Greenland offers an unvarnished account closer to amateur cultural anthropology than a memoir. The modern tendency in memoirs is to talk about oneself and this can be particularly irritating when the writer is offering an eyewitness account of note (Suki Kim mooning after her “lover” while in North Korea, for instance).

Call of the Deep North: “An African in Greenland” by Tété ...

Despite being first published as recently as 1977 in France (and translated to English in 1981), it struck me that An African in Greenland might well be the first travel book detailing an account of someone from the Global South journeying north/west (rather than the other way round) for simple curiosity since Ibn Battuta’s 14th-century Rihla. There haven’t been many more such journeys chronicled since, either.

The furthest a book has taken me: Johnny Pitts on ‘An ...

Written about 25 years ago, it is the first-person account of a journey undertaken by the author, Tété-Michel Kpomassie, from his home village in West Africa to Upernavik in northern Greenland. Kpomassie's part of Africa is francophone — nowadays the nation of Togo — so the book was written first in French, then translated into English by James Kirkup in 1983.
