RULE 1: A social fact is normal in relation to a given social type, viewed at a given phase of its development, when it is present in the average society of that species, considered at the corresponding phase of its evolution. This means that normal social fact shall be functional in the society in which it exists. It is also statistically normal and does not have any harmful consequences for the society. Durkheim’s criterion was discovered in the ordinary distinction between that which is ...

Developmental psychopathology is the study of the development of psychological disorders with a life course perspective. Researchers who work from this perspective emphasize how psychopathology can be understood as normal development gone awry. Developmental psychopathology focuses on both typical and atypical child development in an effort to identify genetic, environmental, and parenting factors that may influence the longitudinal trajectory of psychological well being.

Children tend to acquire these skills in an orderly fashion and within certain age brackets. This pattern of skill acquisition is often referred to as 'Normal or Typical Development', and is used to monitor a child's developmental progress. In some cases late acquisition of these 'milestones' can indicate developmental delay.
