Species diversity is marked by some interesting facts--such as larger areas have more species, and diversity is particularly high near the equator. Other factors to consider are what reduces diversity in ecologically productive places and across what scales of space and time diversity patterns hold.

Species Diversity in Space and Time by Michael L. Rosenzweig

Species Diversity in Space and Time examines crucial questions about species diversity, and seeks to set the agenda for research well into the next century. Why do larger areas have more species? What makes diversity so high near the equator? Has the number of species grown in the last 600 million years?

Patterns in space (Chapter 2) - Species Diversity in Space ...

Importantly, species characterized with very high past diversification rates are interspersed throughout the avian tree
 and across geographic space.

Geographically, the major differences in diversification rates are hemispheric
 rather than latitudinal, with bird assemblages in Asia, North America and southern South America containing a disproportionate number of species from recent rapid radiations.

The global diversity of birds in space and time

The main difference between species diversity and ecosystem diversity is that the species diversity is the variety of species in a particular region whereas the ecosystem diversity is the variety of ecosystems in a particular area.. Species diversity and ecosystem diversity, along with genetic diversity, are the three levels of biodiversity on the earth.

What is the Difference Between Species Diversity and ...

We proposed various reasons for that, but the take-home message is that “to increase crop species diversity, currently minor crops would have to increase in area at the expense of these major crops.” We would need less maize, soybeans and wheat to make space for other crops (to get back to the peak-diversity of the 1960s).

In panel (a) assemblages are sampled across a spatial or temporal gradient in the environment (Env), species occurrence by trophic level (with corresponding food web shown, right), diversity measured here as richness (sum of species occurring at each location) and variation in ecosystem functioning (e.g. productivity, or total community flux) arising from variable and asynchronous variation among species.
