Competing Risks - Princeton University

In such analyses, so-called competing risks may form an important problem. A competing risk is an event that either hinders the observation of the event of interest or modifies the chance that this event occurs. For example, when studying death on dialysis, receiving a kidney transplant is an event that competes with the event of interest.

Competing Risks in Survival Analysis

Competing risks theory allows us to calculate "real world" probabilities where a patient is not only at risk of dying from their cancer but also from any other cause of death. The methods also provide a way of breaking down probabilities of death to give patients a clearer indication of the risks that they face with each decision that they make.
