Cooperation and coordination are ways we work together; collaboration is the most intense relationship organizations can have, creating results they are much more likely to achieve together than alone. Collaboration, therefore, is not another program or project. This means collaboration must be approached differently.

Collaboration is sometimes made to sound like an ultra-smooth process of people working together seamlessly toward a shared goal. The reality is that few collaborating teams work for long without a certain amount of arguing, dissenting, and emoting. Most of the time, this friction occurs for the simple reason that we differ from each other. We have different skills and experiences.
