Well preserved circle with a recumbent stone, and a stunning view of the surrounding hills and forests. We noticed that the stones near the recumbent stone contained veins of quartz which was fascinating. It is unfortunate that one hillside nearby had been stripped of all trees, which was a bit harsh and distracting.

The first monument was erected about 5,000 years ago, and comprised a circle of upright wooden posts surrounding a central wooden post on the site of the northern circle. A century or so later the wooden posts were removed and a stone circle was created here: together with a larger stone circle on the site of the southern circle. Move forward to about 4,200 years ago, and two stone cairns covering cist burials were placed outside the southern stone circle.
