A cash budget is simply a listing of the firm's anticipated cash inflows and outflows over a specified period. Unlike a pro forma income statement (discussed in Chapter 5), the cash budget includes only actual cash flows. For example, depreciation expense (a noncash expense) does not appear on the cash budget, but principal payments on debt obligations

If the cash budget shows an increase in net working capital, you may use that increase to reduce operating costs - by repaying borrowed money, for example. If the cash budget shows a decrease in net working capital, you may need to find some way of increasing available cash - by drawing on a line of credit, taking out a bank loan or by factoring. Factoring, which is particularly common in the clothing industry, consists of selling your accounts receivable at a discount to a third-party.

Cash Budget vs. Statement of Cash Flows

The budget fix for this problem is to change the way that you handle it. Switching to cash only for the category can work, especially if you are shopping in person at a store. This won't work for online purchases, obviously. Use a reward system.
