Akerman's second attempt at Raspberry Pi photography from a weather balloon produced better results than his first try. The credit-card-sized Raspberry Pi computer has been the toy of choice for DIY-computer enthusiasts since it was released last year. So when the Raspberry Pi Foundation started selling an equally tiny $25 5MP camera module recently, a new world of possibilities opened for technologically-inclined photography enthusiasts.

Well, your main options are Bluetooth and WiFi. There's a few things to consider before picking one: Power: If the battery power you have on your weather balloon is limited, there are Bluetooth adapters and protocols that are made for very-low power applications; Range: outdoors and with a clear line of sight, consumer-grade Bluetooth and WiFi adapters have similar ranges (100-200 meters).
