Study Signal Transduction Pathways Flashcards | Quizlet

During signal transduction, a signal may have many components. There is the primary messenger, which may be a chemical signal, electrical pulse, or even physical stimulation. Then, the receptor protein embedded in the cellular membrane must accept the signal. Upon receiving the signal, this protein goes through a conformational change. This changes its shape and thus, how it interacts with the molecules around it.

signal transduction pathways pogil - The Abstract Mirror

The correct sequence of events that takes place during cell signaling is as follows: reception, transduction, and response. The reception stage is the detection of a signal, typically by a receptor on the cell surface. Next, transduction is characterized by the transmission of signals from the cell's exterior to its interior by way of proteins.
