Geochemistry The challenges of global warming and energy security are the drive behind our research. We develop new methods and geomaterials, and help members learn new skills that are vital in a sustainable future. We lead multidisciplinary research linking chemistry to earth science and engineering.

Geochemistry - The University of Nottingham

Geochemists study the composition, structure, processes, and other physical aspects of the Earth. They examine the distribution of chemical elements in rocks and minerals, as well as the movement of these elements into soil and water systems. There is a wealth of information buried in the liquids, gases, and mineral deposits of rock.

Geochemistry - American Chemical Society

Isotopic geochemistry has several principal roles in geology. One is concerned with the enrichment or impoverishment of certain isotopic species that results from the influence of differences in mass of molecules containing different isotopes.

Geology - Isotopic geochemistry | Britannica
