Pollen grains of more than 120 species from c. 40 genera of Malvaceae were studied with light and scanning electron microscopy. The pollen grains are spiny, usually spheroidal and an evolutionary trend from a medium sized, ancestral 3-zonocolporate pollen type with small spines to a large polytreme type with long, sometimes distinctly dimorphic spines is recognised.

Malvaceae: Characters, Distribution and Types

Conversely, distinct pollen morphology was reported by Saad (1960) in Malvaceae and he observed distinguish morphological features between the genera. Also, this family was divided into six pollen categories; on the basis of aperture number and diameter, grain diameter and spine form (Culhane and Blackmore 1988).

Various Pollen Morphology in Hibiscus syriacus

The pollen grains are produced within the anther of the flower. Pollen mother cells originate from the sporogenous tissue of the anther which later divide meiotically to form four pollen grains called tetrad. The pollen grains do not remain united at maturity, and are dissociated into single pollen grain called monad.

Morphological Characteristics of Pollen Grains

The Malvaceae is generally characterized by large spherical pollen grains with an elaborate system of sculpturing. The species under consideration here are pantoporate with small apertures and conspicuous echinae or verrucae uniformly distributed over the surface of the grain.

Malvaceae - ScienceDirect

The pollen grains of Althaea genus are spheroidal, pantoporate, echinate which is characterized by having subglobose pattern at the base of echinae. The pollen of Alcea are spheroidal, pantoporate, echinate and baculate.

Distances between pori are longer in Althaea (9.04–12.75 μm) pollens than pollens of Alcea (5.12–7.28 μm).

Malvaceae pollen is uncollectable for corbiculate bees which has previously been ascribed to pollen size, spines, and pollenkitt.
