The study of creativity has a long history; however, serious research into creativity, certainly from a Western perspective, only really took place from the middle of the 20th century. Many believe the trigger to be Guildford (1950), who in his APA Presidential Address challenged psychologists to pay attention to what he found to be a neglected but extremely important attribute in human behaviour - namely creativity.

Research

Foundation: The Creative Curriculum

The evolution of creative theory has brought our understanding of what creativity is from Guilford's solely cognitive representation in the 1900's to our modern day model that includes intellect, context (problem type and motivation), and personality each as factors of influence.

Theories of

Creativity -

Creativity Today

Creativity research has a long interest in flow states, which have complex links to feelings of inspiration and creative motivation (Csikszentmihalyi, 1990). The original writings on flow emphasize that it is a state that is closely tied to environments, and early experience sampling work emerged from the study of flow (Csikszentmihalyi, 1975). Since then, however, much of the work on flow has taken a static, cross-sectional view, emphasizing individual differences in proneness to flow.

Imbalance occurs when the few speak for the many, and we all suffer for it. At Creative Theory, we restore the balance by amplifying voices, and telling necessary stories that overturn common narratives. In short, we are boardroom advocates— a voice for the overlooked, from concept to completion. We help brands understand who they are, so they can add to the conversation, not the noise.

Creative Theory

Much of the core creativity research and theory is rooted in the arts, but writing and visual art have been more traditional subjects.

Creativity Theory - an overview | ScienceDirect Topics

At Creative Theory, we know that life is a prism of perspective and our world is nothing but a kaleidoscope.

Together, this view adds layers of dimension and beauty to our shared global experience. Knowing that representation matters, we have seen the power of brands in creating a more equitable world.
