Auditory Scene Analysis The Perceptual Organization Of ...

The auditory "scene analysis" problem. Humans and other animals routinely detect, identify, and track sounds coming from a particular source (e.g., someone's voice, a conspecific call) amid sounds emanating from other sources (e.g., other voices, heterospecific calls, ambient music, or street traffic) (Figure 1). The apparent ease with which they determine which components and attributes in a sound mixture arise from the same source belies the complexity of the underlying biological ...

Auditory Scene Analysis The Perceptual Organization Of Sound

The fact that speech need not sound unspeechlike before it can be made to form streams suggests that auditory scene analysis applies as much to speech as to other types of sounds. Technical details: The syntheses use the formant frequencies measured by Peterson and Barney (1952). Natural-sounding amplitude envelopes were applied to all the signals (a 20-msec rise, an 80-msec decline, and finally an exponential decay with a time constant of 10 msec).

Al Bregman's Website - McGill University

Since the recognition of events depends upon the proper assignment of auditory properties to different sound sources, auditory streaming is fundamental to the process of scene analysis — which in turn is fundamental to music perception.
