Choose four-wheel drive and this drops to 54.3mpg and 136g/km. If economy and low VED are your priorities, however, we'd avoid the petrol model. It's actually pretty good in this sector - returning 47.1mpg and emitting 139g/km of CO₂, but the diesels suit the car better and are much cleaner and more economical.

Used MAZDA Cars for Sale (with Photos) - Autotrader

Editorial view: Should you need 4 wheel drive in your performance hatchback, Mazda offers it on the very top spec 3 models, only in the 2.0 petrol engine, and for an additional cost of around £2,200 over the front wheel drive. If you need all wheel drive then it's a good choice, though with the extra weight and drivetrain friction it does blunt performance and fuel economy slightly, so it's a good idea to choose the Skyactive-X 180 horsepower engine if your budget will stretch to it.

Some older Mazda models, such as the MPV had all wheel drive systems, but not a true four wheel drive (off road) system.
